The Indonesian Health Care Problems

1. Increasing interest and the needs of society in quality health services both domestically and abroad in line with the demands of the global market .
2. Double burden of disease, where the morbidity rate of infectious diseases is still high. Noncommunicable disease also have increased quite significantly.
3. Disparity in health status between regions are quite large , especially in the eastern region, which is remote area , border and islands.
4. Increasing demands for distribution of quality and affordable drugs
5. The number of health human resources are limited and unevenly distributed.
6. The potential for catastrophic health problems and climate change.
7. Yet integrated healthcare infrastructure development involving cross-sector within the government, central, regional and private

- The rollout of universal health coverage in Indonesia has been greeted with public enthusiasm, but health experts warn that inadequate funding could undermine the quality of care.
- Potentially complaints and medical disputes to medical doctors
